Kids in a Changing Climate: What Parents Need to Know Moms Clean Air Force Hosts Discussion on Climate Change and Miami Families

The United Nations held a Climate Summit last month to discuss the global threat of climate change – while 400,000 people marched through New York City demanding their governments take action.

Here in Miami, officials are hosting the Southeast Florida Regional Climate Leadership Summit this week to discuss investment risks and strategies for adapting to climate change.

Miami Beach is already experiencing extreme high tides, and Southeastern Florida could face sea level rise of another two feet over the next half-century.

What does it all mean for you and your family?

This Sunday, Moms Clean Air Force will host a discussion about climate change, children's health, and what parents need to know.

Members of the media are invited to join our panel of experts and Miami moms to talk about sea level rise and climate change in Miami, and what we can do about it.

Interviews will be available in English and Spanish. Refreshments will be served.
